

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

First and foremost, I will be forever grateful and indebted to all of the contributors for submitting their interesting and informative chapters for publication, for allocating some of their precious personal time to put them together, for putting up with all my red ink, and for considering and addressing my editorial comments, suggestions and requests. These generous and patient folks are all listed in the Table of Contents, and without them and their strong dedication to the discipline of archaeology, this outstanding and long-overdue book would not have been possible.

Dr. Roy Carlson, Professor Emeritus at the Department of Archaeology, and Managing Editor of Archaeology Press at Simon Fraser University, deserves great praise and many thanks for agreeing to publish this volume, and for his editorial guidance. Dr. Carlson also arranged and hosted a successful and well-attended Lower Fraser River Region symposium for the BC Studies Conference held in May of 2013 at Douglas College, where several chapter contributors gave presentations on their topics. Dr. Carlson informed me that this may be the last volume that Archaeology Press will publish; I hope that it is not. Thanks also go to the Editorial Board of Archaeology Press, whose members include Dr. Brian Hayden, Dr. Alan McMillan, and Dr. George Nicholas.

During the long course of putting everything together, I received a great deal of assistance and encouragement from past and present employees working with me at Antiquus. These wonderful folks include Carla Mainwaring, Geoffrey Homel, Jordan Eng, Lauren Hearty, Megan Harris, and Vanessa Chang. They all helped me keep things organized, and provided much-needed and greatly appreciated technical guidance while I was formatting chapters. Jordan Eng deserves special thanks for lending his outstanding artistic skills to create the excellent front cover illustration. I also thank my wonderful and patient wife Eunice Rousseau, who helped me out with formatting and production matters, and put up with my absence during numerous bouts of editing.

I am also extremely grateful and indebted to Dr. Alan McMillan for agreeing to edit the rather extensive “collective” bibliography presented at the end of this book. His expertise and efforts ensured formal consistency for most of the entries, he caught and corrected many errors and deficiencies, and best of all he spared me from an onerous task that would have taken me much longer to complete. I also really appreciate the useful comments and guidance provided by Ms. Kathryn Bernick pertaining to proper presentation, text editing and formatting.

Several agencies are thanked for allowing use of photographs, maps, and documents that appear in this book. They include the City of Vancouver Archives, Library and Archives Canada, Parks Canada, Royal BC Museum Archives, Royal Engineers, Stantec Consulting, Stó:lō Research and Resource Management Centre, and University of British Columbia Museum of Anthropology and Laboratory of Archaeology.

Lastly, on behalf of the chapter contributors and all other archaeology/heritage research professionals, I extend great appreciation and thanks to all the many First Nation governing agencies and their respective communities occupying the Lower Fraser River Region for their interest, support, involvement, guidance, and assistance during the many archaeological projects conducted over the last 100 years.

Any errors or omissions are solely my fault; I hope they are few.
